Bespoke Course Development

- Shock-based Quasi-Natural Experiment – MRe./First Year PhD

Traditional regression based observational studies are becoming obsolete and have been widely proven to produce spurious links. This has led to the recognition of employing more credible shock based quasi-natural research designs that have been shown to produce credible causal links. This practical module teaches students the basics of undertaking shock-based empirical research in area of empirical finance research. It is based on highly topical and proven shock based research methods widely employed by top-level academic journals in the field of finance, economics, education and other social science fields.

- Sustainable and Purposeful Finance –Undergraduate Honours/MSc.

The core objective of this class it to create an awareness of the recent revolution taking place in redefining the mission/purpose of every commercial business. It aims to show why the traditional concepts taught in business schools, such as shareholder and stakeholder approach of finance are no more adequate to prosper in the future growth of businesses. Why environmental, social and governance factors are the most important and absolute essentials consideration in driving every financial and non-finical decision in business. This class provides a broader academic (economic) and practical (driven by societal consciousness) view of why incorporating ESG factors has become the cornerstone of modern business and investment goals. More importantly, this class will also demonstrate how the corporate and investment fraternity are incorporating ESG criteria in their long-term vision and day-to-day operations

- Research based International Financial Management – Undergraduate Honours

Unlike the traditional text only based international financial management, this is a highly research based and rigours course on measuring and managing foreign exchange and country risk.

Teaching Excellence Award, Short listing and Nominations

Awarded

Stirling University 2011 RATE (Recognising Achievement in Teaching Excellence) Award

Awarded in the category: Excellence in Teaching in the School of Management

A total of 18 categories were awarded as a result of 618 student nominations for 414 members of academic staff across the university.

One of the nominees stated:

“When Chandra teaches he excites the class and shows enthusiasm in what he is teaching. Something I have never experienced with other lectures. His overall knowledge of finance is vast and he always offers himself for any kind of support to the students and makes himself available. As well as these reasons, he is friendly and chats to students before and after lectures, asking how they like the course and how they are finding the workload. Lecture slides and examples are always detailed but concise.”

Short listed
